HOW DID THE FUND PERFORM LAST YEAR AND WHAT AFFECTED ITS PERFORMANCE?

For the 12-month period ended June 30, 2026, the Fund generated a strong positive return but underperformed the MSCI Emerging Markets Index.

WHAT FACTORS INFLUENCED PERFORMANCE

Emerging markets advanced sharply, supported by a weaker U.S. dollar, easing monetary policy and strong AI-related semiconductor demand. The Fund benefited from exposure to several technology and semiconductor companies, as well as selected holdings in Consumer Discretionary and other sectors. Relative performance was held back by the Fund's aggregate underweight to Information Technology, including limited or reduced exposure to several memory and semiconductor companies that led the benchmark. Mixed stock selection in Real Estate and Industrials also tempered results.

POSITIONING

At period-end, Information Technology remained the Fund's largest sector exposure, although it was underweight the benchmark. The Fund was overweight in Real Estate, Consumer Discretionary, Industrials, and Financials, and underweight in Materials and Health Care. Taiwan Semiconductor, Samsung Electronics and SK Hynix were among the Fund's largest holdings, reflecting continued exposure to long-term semiconductor and AI-related demand.

PERFORMANCE

The Fund's holdings generated strong absolute gains during the period. Positive contributions from selected technology and consumer-related companies were outweighed, on a relative basis, by the benchmark's greater exposure to several of the strongest-performing semiconductor and memory companies and by mixed results in other sectors.

HOW DID THE FUND PERFORM OVER THE PAST 10 YEARS?*
